In retirement, Ed Nescio trades his smock for a fishing pole

Starting in his early twenties, Ed Nescio provided great customer service in grocery stores throughout southeastern Pennsylvania.

Now, after 38 years, he's traded his life inside the ShopRite meat department for a new life of fishing on the Jersey Shore and playing with his grandkids.

"It was time to slow down," said Nescio, who retired on April 1. "I put in enough years to collect a good pension and now I'll be able to spend more time during holidays with my family."

Wheaton Industries workers unite

Workers at Wheaton Industries, a glass manufacturing facility for medical supplies in Millville, N.J., voted to join Local 152 in March.

The workers expressed concerns about wages, favoritism and the lack of a bidding process for jobs. These 43 new members also stood strong in the face of a coordinated anti-union campaign from the company's management.

"We are proud to welcome these workers into our union family," Local 152

President Brian String said.

Sticking together

Organizers from the union have been in discussions with workers at the facility for years, Local 152 Director of Organizing Chad Brooks said, but the process started to speed up recently when workers reached out to Local 152.

The company hired an anti-union consultant to influence workers during

Ed Nescio retires after 38 years

He started as an apprentice in East Norriton, PA, and stayed with ShopRite his entire career, ending up as a meat manager at R&R ShopRite in Philadelphia.

“My father always said if I wasn’t going to college I should make sure to find a job that’s organized,” he recalled.

“It’s because I was supported by a union that I’m able to retire today. I feel blessed I was able to work for a union shop.”

He learned to cut meat in meat markets and small delis while in high school before applying at ShopRite and becoming a member of Local 196, which became Local 56 and later Local 152.

Throughout his years in the industry, he appreciated the focus on customer service at ShopRite and the ability of each store to cater to its customers.

“We’re always listening to customers and making sure we deliver,” he said.

“ShopRite gives you that freedom to operate almost as an independent store. At my store there is a demand for kosher meat, so we have one of the largest kosher sections of any ShopRite.”

Helping his union

Nescio became a steward 10 years ago to help communicate the benefits of union membership to his fellow members in the store. He often fielded questions about the collective bargaining agreement as well as how to navigate health care benefits.

“Working as a steward was a way I could give back to the union that has always been so good to me.

“I was on three negotiating committees for Local 152 and I learned how difficult it is to maintain our good health benefits,” he said. “The company always wants to take those away. But until younger members have a need for those benefits, they don’t realize their importance. During hospitalizations or when my children were born, it was all covered. That stuff is immeasurable.”

In the past five years he also served on Local 152’s Executive Board.

“I consider it an honor to have been chosen for the board,” he said. “It was interesting to learn how the union works. We oversaw the Grievance Committee and heard about the union’s investments.

“It’s not easy to keep all of your benefits in today’s environment, but our union has been able to do so,” he continued.

In addition to fishing, Nescio enjoys working on his children’s houses as well as his own home in Warminster, PA, where he lives with his wife, Joanne.

He looks back fondly on his time in the grocery industry.

“I’ll miss the camaraderie we had among the associates,” he said. “I will miss those friendships.”

Acme sets course for future

□ In this column, analyst Jeff Metzger looks at developments in the supermarket industry around the country.

Meetings between Acme Markets and its vendors have produced lots of insight into the direction of the large Mid-Atlantic retailer, which has added more supermarkets to its base than any other operator in the region since late 2015.

Such was the case earlier this year when the Malvern, PA-based merchant addressed more than 250 vendor representatives at its Pennsville, NJ store to discuss the current state of Acme. There was a consistent tone of candor in noting the internal challenges that stemmed from rapidly adding 71 former A&P stores into the fold 18 months ago, along with the current fiercely competitive overall market conditions.

Remodels and more

Acme's new geographic footprint now includes 178 stores, including 83 in New Jersey, 53 in Pennsylvania, 16 in Delaware, 16 in New York (all former A&P units), six in Maryland and four in Connecticut (all former A&P stores, too). With new stores to open in Philadelphia (one on Front & Snyder and another one yet undisclosed) later this year and 23 remodelings also scheduled, improving store operations is a major priority for the chain.

Other areas that have helped Acme build revenue over the past year have been the addition of beer and wine departments (including its Frosted Mug pub) and the expansion of its Starbucks coffee departments.

Acme announced plans to "go big" with its displays while also merchandising its natural/organics/specialty items and own brands more effectively. Speakers at the Malvern meeting also detailed the success of the gas rewards program with Sunoco, noting that customers who use the program are likely to spend twice as more as non-gas rewards shoppers.

Avoid insubordination — do what you're told!

Know the rules to save your job

The dictionary defines insubordination as “failure to submit to authority” — in other words, “not doing what you’re asked or told to do.”

Ever since we were young, we have had to listen to people in positions of authority. Our parents told us what to do, and when we didn’t obey, we’d be grounded or worse.

Our schoolteachers told us what to do, and if we didn’t obey them we’d get detention or bad marks on our report cards.

Now that we are working adults, we have another level of authority we must deal with, including managers and supervisors at our workplaces.

But this time the penalties for disobedience are more severe. If you do not do what your supervisors tell you, you could lose your job.

Your job is important — protect it

If someone in a position of authority tells you to do something, do it. As long as it’s not illegal or unsafe, you should comply.

If a manager or supervisor asks you to do something you think is not correct according to your union contract, you should still do it — and then at your first opportunity contact your union representative. A grievance will be filed on your behalf if there has indeed been a violation of the contract.

The contract protects you, but you should not try to interpret its language. Let your union ensure that the rules are followed.

You may have been right all along in thinking your orders were incorrect.

Secretary-Treasurer's Report

By Anthony Benigno

But your job is too important to risk in case you are wrong.

Avoid insubordination — do what you’re told!

the organizing campaign and falsely blamed the union for the impending closure of the General Mills/Progresso plant in Vineland, N.J.

“Not only that,” Brooks said, “but Wheaton went as far as to tell the workers that all the Progresso workers would have seniority over them and they could come to Wheaton and bump all of the workers out of a job.”

Despite the challenges, Brooks praises the solidarity of the workers.

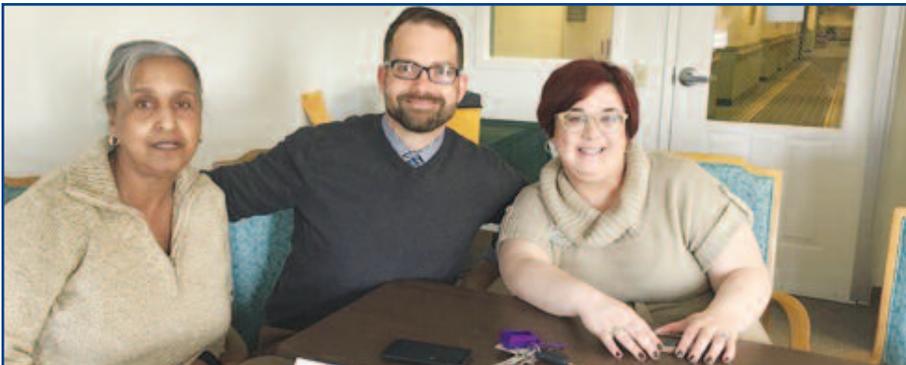

“The workers did a great job of sticking together during the campaign,” he said. “We had a great turnout at our proposal meeting and everyone is excited for contract negotiations to begin.”

In addition to wage increases, workers at the facility are seeking more affordable health care costs, seniority rules and fairness in relation to the company’s bonus program as part of their first contract.

“We look forward to negotiating a great contract and giving these workers the better life they deserve,” Brooks said.

Manufacturing industry update

Hormel Foods warehouse workers ratify new contract

On April 17, members of UFCW Local 431 who work at Logistic Services LLC, a warehouse for Hormel Foods in Eldridge, Iowa, unanimously ratified a new four-year contract.

The contract covers about 75 workers in the display area and warehouse. It includes wage and start rate increases and maintains current insurance benefits. It also includes a paid union orientation, an increased pension benefit for all years of service, increased vacation time, additional paid funeral leave and an increase in a safety shoe allowance.

In addition, the new contract separates attendance discipline from other disciplines.

“I’m proud of our negotiating committee for standing firm on the important issues of wages and benefits to guarantee a better future for their families” UFCW Local 431 Secretary-Treasurer Lois Taylor said.

UFCW and Tyson Foods team up to create a safer workplace

On April 26, the UFCW issued a press release to applaud Tyson Foods for pledging to create a better workplace at its production facilities with new and expanded initiatives on safety, transparency and compensation. Tyson Foods worked in collaboration with the UFCW on its efforts.

Tyson has now committed to continuing its collaboration with the UFCW on a workplace safety and illness and injury prevention initiative. The initiative includes safety changes, including a policy to allow workers to stop the line at any time for worker or food safety issues.

Health care industry update

Carefree Living workers join UFCW Local 1189 in Minnesota

On April 21, 21 workers at Carefree Living, an assisted living facility in Aurora, Minn., voted to join UFCW Local 1189.

The assisted living workers, who include resident assistants, housekeepers and dietary aides, were concerned about workplace safety, compressed wages, understaffing and lack of compensation for working overtime.

“The organizing committee knew what they and their coworkers wanted: a voice on the job and respect from management,” UFCW Local 1189 organizer Diana Tastad said. “We congratulate the workers and welcome them to the union.”

“The workers at Carefree Living worked hard to win their union,” UFCW Local 1189 President Jennifer Christensen said. “In spite of management’s attempts to scare the workers, they stuck together and didn’t let fear win!”

Senior living industry looks for new ways to engage workers

The senior living industry could have greater success if it embraced two new workplace trends, according to SeniorHousingNews.com.

The website cites a recent report by the company Sodexo, which found that recognizing worker accomplishments and creating gender-balanced teams help workers better connect to their jobs and improve their quality of life.

Senior living companies nationwide,

Workers at the Carefree Living assisted living facility in Minnesota recently voted to join the UFCW including Maryland-based Asbury Communities, already have begun putting this advice into practice.

Joann Ciabattoni retires: 'You should enjoy what you do'

When Joann Ciabattoni started in the grocery industry, you had to know someone to get a job at a supermarket. Luckily, she was dating someone in the meat department of her local Pantry Pride store and was able to land an interview.

Ciabattoni embraced her “strong union job” and now, 45 years later, she’s stepping aside to spend more time with her grandchildren and travel with her husband, Raymond.

Ciabattoni retired on March 24 from Zallie’s ShopRite in West Berlin, N.J., where she was the head wrapper in the meat department.

“My body told me this was the year,” she said.

Nevertheless, she will miss working with her fellow members in the store. She will also miss the many customers she befriended over the years, including one older woman who requested she pick out cuts of meat for her each week and bring them to her house after work.

Despite her long tenure in the industry, Ciabattoni’s early plans were to work for the Bell Telephone Company through connections from her older brother, a vice president at the local chapter of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (IBEW). She instead chose the supermarket path and became a dedicated member of Local 56 (now Local 152).

Joann Ciabattoni with Local 152 Union Representative Greg Torian.

In the early years of her career, she worked with nearly 20 members in the meat department, as opposed to eight members today. Many aspects of the department have changed, she said, presenting challenges for new members.

“It’s a lot harder to teach new members now about the different cuts of meat because it comes to the store pre-cut in a box,” she said. “Back then, we had hanging beef, so when you watched the butchers cut it you learned about the different parts.”

Ciabattoni appreciates her benefits and was always involved with her union. She served the past 10 years as a steward.

“I found being a steward very rewarding,” she said, adding that the most common questions she heard were about contract issues.

“I learned a lot and helped other members stay out of trouble. We were always able to talk to management and work something out.”

In retirement, she hopes to return to Myrtle Beach and other favorite vacation spots with Raymond, who is also planning to retire this fall.

Looking back on her time in the grocery industry, her advice to younger members is simple:

“Wake up every day and do it,” she said.

“You know if the job is for you or not for you. When you go to work, you should enjoy what you do.”

The UFCW’s new “how to” video features UFCW Local 653 member Jon Viner, a butcher at Cub Foods in Minneapolis, who shows you how to sharpen your kitchen knives at home.

This video is part of a series of “how to” tips from UFCW members who are experts in their fields. You can watch UFCW’s “how to” videos at ufcw.org/howto.

All workers pay a 'Walmart tax'

Walmart has a long history of treating its workers poorly, paying notoriously low wages, providing substandard benefits, discriminating against women and intimidating employees who try to assert their rights.

Union members have known for decades that America's largest employer is bad for communities, bad for workers and bad for the economy.

But does the public at large know the extent of Walmart's negative impact?

A report by Americans for Tax Fairness may be a wake-up call for those who don't already realize the extent of misguided tax policies that subsidize Walmart's destructive business practices.

The report estimates that Walmart receives $6.2 billion in tax breaks each year, mostly from the federal government, as the company rakes in tens of billions of dollars in profits.

In a recent USA Today commentary titled "The Walmart Tax Every American Taxpayer Pays," Lonnie Sheppard, from UFCW Local 1529 in Memphis, writes:

"The world's largest retailer, infamous for its poor working conditions and unfair treatment of employees, pays its workers so little that thousands of Walmart employees are forced to rely on public assistance programs like food stamps, Medicaid and subsidized housing. Programs funded by American taxpayers."

"No matter the town or city, if you have a Walmart in your community, you are paying a Walmart Tax," Sheppard continues.

"In fact, a single Walmart Supercenter is estimated to cost taxpayers between $904,542 and $1.74 million per year in public assistance money."

Knowing the truth

Local 152 members and other union members nationwide refuse to shop at Walmart because every dollar it receives contributes to the destruction of good union jobs and lower standards for everyone in the retail industry. Not all shoppers feel the same, however, and in some parts of the country Walmart is the only local retailer.

These shoppers deserve to know about the hidden tax that goes into Walmart's low prices.

Sheppard outlines a solution to Walmart's reliance on taxpayer dollars:

"With billions in profits, Walmart can easily do the right thing and pay its workers a better wage," he writes.

"Logically, if Walmart increased employee wages, and/or provided better benefits, much of the burden would be lifted off the taxpayer."
